

Entry & Advanced CPR (Concentration Portfolio Review) & How to Count Studio Classes

Studio art classes are those classes where you create artwork (art projects). The first 7 studio art classes (21 hours) you take will typically be what determines (or those we “count”) going through your ENTRY CPR for most areas. This is mainly how your “portfolio” of work is created to show for your review. Additionally, for BFA studio majors, the first 12 studio art classes (36 hours) you take will determine when you will go through your ADVANCED CPR. That’s 5 more studio classes after your first review (for most majors). BA majors may not have an ADVANCED CPR at this time, unless your area requests it.

Typically, students go through ENTRY CPR & ADVANCED CPR the same semester they are enrolled into their 7th and 12th studio class (so that means you’ll be taking studios at the same time you’re going through review). *Photography will review their student’s portfolios at 24 hrs, Cinematic Arts will review upon completion of 24 hrs w/ 9 minimum CA hours. Design reviews their students portfolios at 30 hours. These areas only have one portfolio review. ****

Take a look below to see which classes might possibly be used as a part of your ENTRY CPR studio “count.”

Anything in here will count as a studio art course toward CPR

The Art Studio Elective and any studio from your Concentration area can count toward CPR. *The studio art elective should relate to your concentration if used for CPR. Otherwise, you don't have to count it.

If Art Studios fulfill this area for BFA, they can count toward CPR *IF they work well with your major
